Every time someone goes on an Erasmus to discover another culture, integrate into another culture, learn a language – they form new relationships with the people around them directly, and also indirectly. People who are able to travel can discover other cultures for themselves and appreciate diversity. This is something that you cannot learn just from television.

In my opinion, Hungary was a good choice for Erasmus. It is really nice country with good connections with others. Hungarian cuisine and culture are amazing. Budapest was good city for living. There is interesting things that can be visited. I hope I will come back soon.

The Obuda University in Budapest is a great place for learning. It was easy to cooperate with professor Ágota Drégelyi-Kiss. She has always been available if we need help. We had chance to get acquainted with the work in laboratory. It was interesting experience for me because some things I saw for the first time. I am really pleasantly surprised about this faculty and all the equipment that they possess.

I like internship programme here, it is not so though and I had free time to travel and explore other things. This was a good time for learning new cultures, to try different food and to exchange my older experience and knowledge.

This experience was valuable for me. I meet a lot of new people and learnt some new things about architecture. I would recommend it to everyone.
